SUNDAYS, PAST AND PRESENT. PROM A COMMENCEMENT PORM. And there's the old-fashioned Sunday,
So famous with old Mrs. Grundy,—
We've out-grown the Biblical notion,
Of using a day fordevotion,
For our souls are now dwindled so small
They're scarcely worth saving at all!

They rescarcely worth saving at all!
And every seven days we thus gain
A days journey on Belsebuo's train!
Our fathers, so wondrously odd,
Had such a respect for their God,
They gave him one day in seven,
To fit them for earth and for heaven.
They obeyed the Almighty's old laws,
And did so not simply because
'Twas a politic kind of a messure—
They thought it a duty and pleasure;
And while serving God well on Sunday,
Didn't think he alept over on Monday.
We call their opinious too rigid;
We look on our fathers as frigid
Old fellows, whose doleful, blue piety
Had nothing but whines and long pray.

She began to cry bitterly, and said to herself, "What shall I do now, a poor girl like me; I cannot find my way out of the wood; nobody lives here, and I must perish with hunger." She looked about for a road, but could not find one; and when evening came she sat down under a tree, and commending herself to God determined to remain where she was, whatever might happen. She had not sat there a long while before a little white pigeon came flying towards her, carrying in his beak a small golden key.
